The great triumphs of the Civil Rights Movement during the 1950’s and ‘60’s continue to inspire those who seek justice and equality today.

Civil Rights Memorial Center

In Montgomery, Alabama, in 1989, the Southern Poverty Law Center built a memorial to educate young people about the Civil Rights Movement.

Memorial designer Maya Lin, who also designed the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C., says it is “a place to remember the Civil Rights Movement, to honor those killed during the struggle, to appreciate how far the country has come in its quest for equality, and to consider how far it has to go.”

A visitor studies the Civil Rights Memorial. What would you expect to see if you visited the Memorial? Include a drawing of yourself, a friend, or a family member on the coloring page.

A Lawyer Seeking Justice

Morris Dees grew up on a cotton farm in Alabama. He picked cotton alongside the black men who worked on the farm. Even when he was little, he did not believe that black people and white people should be treated differently. He was very fair even then.

When he was still in college, he started a business delivering birthday cakes to his classmates who couldn't be with their families.

After he became a lawyer, Morris fought in the courts for black people and white people and people of all races to be treated the same — even when no other lawyers would. He won lawsuits that allowed black people to join the state police force, swim in YMCA swimming pools, and get elected into the state legislature.

Morris Dees looked around the country and saw that there were many people who needed his help. Morris wanted to help those people, too, so he and Montgomery attorney Joe Levin created the Southern Poverty Law Center. Today, Morris Dees and the Southern Poverty Law Center help hundreds of thousands of people all over the country to be treated fairly.

This was the scene in bus stations across the South during segregation. Take a moment to study the photograph.

Write a short story from the point of view of the gentleman in the photograph. Where is he going? Whom will he meet along the way? Imagine how his journey is affected by the practices of segregation, and how he must be forced to deal with them, emotionally and practically.

This image shows a single sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and run across the width of the page. There are no margins, text, or other markings on the paper.

Do you know this favorite protest song from the Civil Rights Movement?
Sing along, then create your own refrain to share with friends and family.

We Shall Overcome

Originally composed as “I’ll Overcome Someday” by Rev. Charles Tindley in 1901.

We shall overcome, we shall overcome,
We shall overcome someday;
Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
We shall overcome someday.

The Lord will see us through, the Lord will see us through,
The Lord will see us through someday;
Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
We shall overcome someday.

We’re on to victory, we’re on to victory,
We’re on to victory someday;
Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
We’re on to victory someday.

We’ll walk hand in hand, we’ll walk hand in hand,
We’ll walk hand in hand someday;
Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
We’ll walk hand in hand someday.

We are not afraid, we are not afraid,
We are not afraid today;

Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
We are not afraid today.

The truth shall set us free, the truth shall set us free,
The truth shall set us free someday;
Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
The truth shall set us free someday.

We shall live in peace, we shall live in peace,
We shall live in peace someday;
Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe,
We shall live in peace someday.

My verse:

Who Said That?

Sometimes someone says something so amazing that it just has to be repeated.

The Civil Rights Memorial’s beautiful black granite wall includes a quote from Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. This line from the Book of Amos was quoted by Dr. King during his “I Have a Dream” speech. It reflects his belief that we must keep working to ensure equal rights for everyone.

“Until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream”

Think about what you might say to express a similar sentiment.

The best quotes are short and to the point. Create your own memorable quote to be placed on the Civil Rights Memorial wall on the next page.

This is what I believe:

Once you have added your own memorable quote to the memorial, color in the water as it flows over the surfaces.

Even though her children grew up without their mother, what lasting lesson did she leave for them?

Who Am I?

I was a mother of five children living in Detroit, Michigan. One night, I saw some very disturbing images on the evening news. State troopers in Selma, Alabama, were attacking peaceful protestors with tear gas and clubs as they tried to cross the Edmund Pettus Bridge. I couldn't do anything but cry as I watched.

Four days later came the news reports of the death of the Rev. James Reeb, a white minister from Washington, D. C., who came to Alabama to join Dr. King and thousands of others who were determined to march from Montgomery to Selma.

I got in my car and left for Selma alone.

The March Continues

Social movements often use signs to convey a message. Civil Rights activists would create signs to be used as part of demonstrations or acts of civil disobedience. Design a protest sign to deliver your own important message.

Who Am I?

Once, I walked alone from Baltimore, Maryland, to the state capitol in Annapolis to protest segregation.

Later, I walked to Washington, D.C., to deliver a letter I wrote to President Kennedy at the White House.

My last walk was to be much longer — from Chattanooga, Tennessee, to Jackson, Mississippi — to deliver a letter urging Governor Ross Barnett to accept integration.

I never finished that march.
Thankfully, others completed it for me.

Ripples of Hope

Inside the Civil Rights Memorial Center, next to the Wall of Tolerance, a quote from Robert F. Kennedy’s 1966 speech at Cape Town University in South Africa appears. It reads, in part:

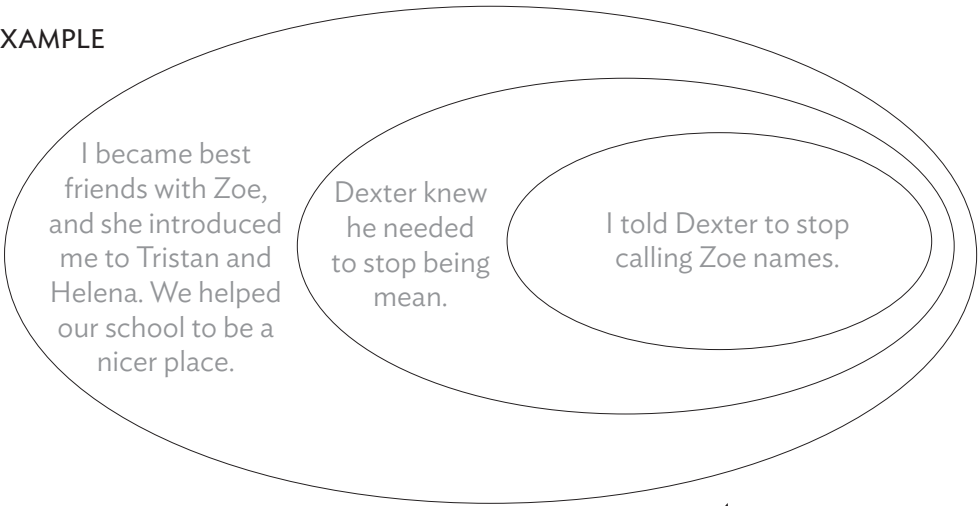

... Each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total of these acts will be written the history of this generation.

... Each time a man stands up for an ideal, or acts to improve the lot of others, or strikes out against injustice, he sends forth a tiny ripple of hope.

When you drop a rock in a pool of water, small waves ripple out from where the rock hit the water. Water also bubbles up through the Civil Rights Memorial to ripple out over the names of people who took a stand during the Civil Right Movement. In a similar way, when you make a personal choice, the effect or consequences of that choice can ripple out to many other people.

Think about a time when you took a stand to help someone else. Fill out the ripples on the facing page, to show how your choice affected those around you.

I was the youngest of 12 children. My dad was a farmer. We had 80 acres of land.

I served as a military police officer in the U. S. Army, reaching the rank of corporal.

My wife had just had a new baby, and I was granted emergency leave to go home. I was excited about seeing them, but a little anxious about the 950-mile bus ride.

I was asleep when the bus pulled into my hometown of Taylorsville, Mississippi. Apparently, a Taylorsville police officer came on board when we arrived. He woke me up by slapping my face. The officer slapped me several more times before he shot me.

Some say the police officer shot me because I was seated in the wrong section of the bus. Others say I was mistaken for a “Freedom Rider.” The police officer later claimed I attacked him, and the grand jury believed him. The police officer was cleared of any wrongdoing.

More than 2,000 people attended my funeral. I was buried with full military honors, including a 16-gun salute.

Why would someone be upset because a black person was seated in the “wrong” section of the bus?
